CORI Research Analysis

Date: 02 March 2009

Country: Algeria

Issues: Algerian Sunni converting to Shi'ite sect of Islam

Query ID: HCR00001E

This CORI research analysis was commissioned by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees Status Determination and Protection Information Section, Division of International Protection Services. CORI research analyses are prepared on the basis of publicly available information, studies and commentaries and produced within a specified time frame. All sources are cited. Every effort has been taken to ensure accuracy and comprehensive coverage of the research issue, however as COI is reliant on publicly available documentation there may be instances where the required information is not available. The analyses are not, and do not purport to be, either exhaustive with regard to conditions in the country surveyed, or conclusive as to the merits of any particular claim to refugee status or asylum. Any views expressed in the paper are those of the author and are not necessarily those of UNHCR.

1. Description of the ethno-religious composition of Algerian society.

2. How does one convert from Sunni to Shia sects in Algeria? What are the legal (including Sharia) or practical ramifications, if any, of such conversions?

Ethno-religious composition of Algerian Society

Ethnicity
99% of the Algerian population are of Arab, Berber or Arab-Berber mixed ethnicity with Europeans making up less than 1% of the population\(^1\). Although one US government source states that “almost all Algerians are Berber in origin, not Arab”\(^2\), several sources stress a shared Arab-Berber history\(^3\) and common lineage in Algeria creating permeable boundaries between the two ethnic groups.\(^4\) One source states that “identification with the Berber or Arab community is largely a matter of personal choice rather than of membership in discrete and bounded social entities.5

---

Since Independence in 19626, programmes of Arabisation have been introduced regulating society and public life7 as a result many Algerians identify as Arab.8 Estimates suggest that Algerian Arabs represent 80% of the population and are culturally and politically dominant.9 Berber groups experienced the process of Arabisation as the repression of their cultural and linguistic identity.10 Reuters reports that tensions between Arabs and Berbers stemming from economic, linguistic and religious differences and have boiled over into clashes periodically in the last 20 years.11 The BBC reports that in 2001 the government agreed to officially recognize Tamazight, a Berber language.12 However its status is as a national, rather than ‘official’ language.13

Since 1966, the Algerian census stopped using a category for Berber ethnicity, therefore figures concerning their percentage constituent of the population are only estimates.14 Estimates on the percentage size of the Berber speaking population range from 17%15 to 30%.16 Minority Rights Group International (MRGI) state that the Berber-speaking minority makes up one quarter of the population, and is concentrated in the mainly mountainous areas of Kabylia, Aurès, the M’zab and the Sahara.17

According to MRGI the Kabyles who represent half of the Berber-speaking population are concentrated in the mountainous areas east of Algiers in Kabylie; the Kabyles have moved in large numbers to cities in Algeria. The second largest Berber group, the Shawiya, inhabit the mountains of eastern Algeria. Two smaller Berber communities are the Mozabites of the area around Ghardaia and the Tuareg nomads of the south. The 12,000 Tuareg, who are nomadic Berbers, live almost exclusively in the mountainous massifs of Aïjer and Ahaggar in southern Algeria.18

Religion

According to the US State Department (USSD) 99% of the Algerian population is Sunni Muslim19 of the Malikite school20 and 1% Christian or Jewish.21 The Algerian constitution declares Islam as the state religion.22

---

6 US Department of State, Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs: Profile, Algeria. October 2007
15 Oxfam, Ethnic Groups: Berber
16 BBC, Country Profile: Algeria, 10 March 2009
19 US Department of State, Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs: Profile, Algeria, October 2007
20 Also spelt as ‘Malekite’, also known as Maliki, University of Cumbria, Overview of World Religions; Malikiyyah, undated
22 US Department of State, Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs: Profile, Algeria, October 2007
Minority Rights Group International states that all Berbers apart from Mozabites are Sunni Muslims. Mozabites practice a form of Islam called Ibadi. Ibadi Muslims number 150-200,000 people.

No information was found concerning the number of Shia muslims or the nature of their communities in Algeria.

There is no official data available on the number of Christian and Jewish citizens, however the US State Department reported that practitioners have estimated their combined number at 50,000. The USSD report stated that according to Christian community leaders, evangelical Christians, mostly in the Kabylie region, account for the largest number of Christians followed by Methodists and members of other Protestant denominations, Roman Catholics and Seventh-day Adventists. The Special Rapporteur reported figures suggested by communities themselves of 10,000 Catholics and between 5,000 and 20,000 Protestants in Algeria, with one Adventist church said to have a congregation of about 20. The USSD report stated that Christians were mainly concentrated in the large cities of Algiers, Annaba and Oran.

The USSD reported that the Jewish community had diminished to virtual non-existence due to fears of terrorist violence, the community was not considered to be active and there was no working synagogue. The Special Rapporteur reported that according to the Ministry of the Interior’s Director of Public Liberties, there may be around 1,000 Jews living in Algiers, Blida and Constantine.

Political attitudes towards Sunni-Shia conversion

The Centre on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World reports that in the Middle East, “The Sunni-Shi'a divide is becoming a central feature of regional politics, reflecting the reaction of Sunnis to what they term the "Shi'a surge" or "tide" (al-madd al-Shi'i).”

The Economist reports that the Iranian President and the supreme guide of the Muslim Brotherhood accuse Israel and America of stirring Sunni-Shia tensions. Iran is a Shia state and The Muslim Brotherhood an influential Sunni organization.

---

24 Oxfam, Ethnic Groups: Berber
However Arab media sources have reported that conversions of Sunni Muslims to Shia Islam is causing concern to governments of Arab and Muslim countries.\textsuperscript{35}

Al Jazeera reports that the Head of the International Federation of Muslim Scholars has criticized Iran for trying to promote Shia beliefs in Sunni countries, saying that such attempts might cause resentment,

“"It is not right for a sect to try to promote its belief in a country that fully embraces different sect. What is your interest in going to a Sunni country like Egypt, Sudan, Morocco, Algeria or any other Sunni Muslim country, and try to convince people to convert to Shia? How many will give up their belief? Eventually, you will be cursed and people will hate you."\textsuperscript{36}

Several sources report on conversions as an increasing trend.\textsuperscript{37} Contributing factors are stated to include Iranian missionary activity and the perceived success of Hezbollah in the war with Israel in July and August 2006.\textsuperscript{38}

The Centre on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World reports that Sunni governments in North Africa are “on alert” to activities perceived to be attempting to spread Shiism.\textsuperscript{39}

“In November 2006 Algeria’s minister of education reportedly dismissed eleven teachers for conducting Shi’a missionary work (dawa) in the schools. Teachers who are Shi’a expatriates from Iraq, Syria and Lebanon are held to be primarily responsible for the spread of Shiism in Algeria, but Hezbollah’s al-Manar television channel is influential as well.\textsuperscript{40}

News source Al Aribya.net reports that the eleven teachers were transferred to administrative posts to prevent them coming into contact with students and were forbidden to have any contact with students. It reported that this measure was aimed at combatting Shi’ite proselytism as the number of conversions were spreading in Algeria\textsuperscript{41}.

An Algerian news source reported in January 2007 that security services opened investigations into two Shia groups run by converts in the area of Mascara. The groups were alleged to have been attempting to spread Shia beliefs and convert young men by holding debate meetings in houses and public places. The article reported the executives of the Mascara Religious Affairs Direction as condemning this on the grounds that proselytizing to a certain Muslim creed among a different Muslim community is forbidden.\textsuperscript{42}

\textsuperscript{36}Ahmed Janabi, Iran and the Shia Legacy , 01 February 2009, Al Jazeera.net
\textsuperscript{37}Israel Elad-Altman, The Sunni-Shia Conversion Controversy, Center on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World, 6 April 2007; Religioscope. 15 April 2007. Monde musulman: craintes de prosélytisme chilite; Chawki, Freiha. 20 February 2007. Le Maroc poursuit six activistes soupçonnés de promouvoir le chisme. Qum s’attire les nouveaux convertis, MediArabe.info
\textsuperscript{38}Israel Elad-Altman, The Sunni-Shia Conversion Controversy, Center on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World, 6 April 2007; Religioscope, Monde musulman: craintes de prosélytisme chilite, 15 April 2007; Chawki, Freiha, Le Maroc poursuit six activistes soupçonnés de promouvoir le chisme. Qum s’attire les nouveaux convertis, 20 February 2007, MediArabe.info;
\textsuperscript{39}Israel Elad-Altman, The Sunni-Shia Conversion Controversy, Center on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World, 6 April 2007
\textsuperscript{40}Israel Elad-Altman, The Sunni-Shia Conversion Controversy, Center on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World, 6 April 2007
\textsuperscript{41}Al Arabiya.net, L’Algérie prend des mesures pour lutter contre la "chilitisation", 18 December 2006, available on MediArabe.info
\textsuperscript{42}www.algeria-events.com, Shia groups proselytize in western Algeria, 06 January 2007
News sources also reported instances of the following Shi’ite activities in Algeria; adoption of typical rituals of Iranian Shiism; Shiism training sessions and centres; an Algerian imam based in Iran organising travel to Iran for study; Hezbollah running several Shiism training sessions in 2007; participation in rites associated with Shiism; internet sites spreading Shiite literature. Radio France Internationale also report satellite TV channels and clandestine CD propaganda distribution networks.

The Centre on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World reported that Sunni Arabs in the Middle East are fearful of their societies being “subject to a sinister religious and ideological invasion, not only by Shiism, but also by nationalistic Iran.” One Arab media source stated that Sunni Muslims are fearful of ‘contamination’ by Shia Islam. The Algerian newspaper, El Watan, carried an interview with an Algiers university professor speaking in terms of a Shi’ite “invasion” and the “threat to the social and religious unity of Algeria.”

Conversion process
The Washington Post and New York Post report that conversion from Sunni to Shia can be a simple process in which a Sunni attends a Shi’ite mosque and adopts the Shi’ite manner of performing Islamic rites. This may involve changing the wording of prayers and changing posture while praying by holding arms at the sides rather than in front. For a more formal conversion, the Washington Post states that “a Sunni can go to a Shiite cleric and declare his belief that the Prophet Muhammad’s son-in-law Ali is his rightful heir, which Sunnis do not believe.”

Implications for Sunni’s who convert to Shiism.
No specific information was identified about the implications for individuals resulting from conversion. However sources speaking to the New York Times and Washington Post including converts, wished to remain anonymous due to the sensitivity of the issue and for fear of recrimination.

---

43 Religioscope, Monde musulman: craintes de prosélytisme chiite, 15 April 2007
44 Béni Azia, El Khabar, Des membres du Hezbollah libanais pour encadrer des sessions de conversion au chiisme, 07 July 2008
45 Béni Azia, El Khabar, Des membres du Hezbollah libanais pour encadrer des sessions de conversion au chiisme, 07 July 2008
46 Béni Azia, El Khabar, Des membres du Hezbollah libanais pour encadrer des sessions de conversion au chiisme, 07 July 2008
47 Al Arabiya.net, L’Algérie prend des mesures pour lutter contre la “chiitisation”, 18 December 2006, available on MediArabe.info
48 Chawki, Freiha, Le Maroc poursuit six activistes soupçonnés de promouvoir le chiisme. Qum s’attire les nouveaux convertis, 20 February 2007, MediArabe.info; Religioscope, Monde musulman: craintes de prosélytisme chiite, 15 April 2007
50 Israel Elad-Altman, The Sunni-Shia Conversion Controversy, Center on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World, 6 April 2007
51 Chawki, Freiha, MediArabe.info, Le Maroc poursuit six activistes soupçonnés de promouvoir le chiisme. Qum s’attire les nouveaux convertis, 20 February 2007
53 Israel Elad-Altman. 6 April 2007. The Sunni-Shia Conversion Controversy, Center on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World
54 Israel Elad-Altman. 6 April 2007. The Sunni-Shia Conversion Controversy, Center on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World
57 Washington Post, Jordon fears growing Shi’ite influence, 17 November 2006
58 Washington Post, Jordon fears growing Shi’ite influence, 17 November 2006
The Algerian newspaper, El Khabar reported that people are fearful of openly announcing their conversion and don’t do so through belief in the principle of hiding one’s course from those who do not share it, resulting in little being known about the issue of conversion in Algeria. The Centre for Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World concurred that many converts keep their conversion a secret due to the sensitivity of the issue, the Centre also reports that this secrecy is an accepted and sometimes recommended practice of Shiism.

Legal implications

The Algerian Constitution adopted on 28 November 1996 provides that freedom of conscience and belief are inviolable (art. 36.) However the US State Department reported that the Ordinance 06-03, in effect in September 2006 and enforced since February 2008, and the 2001 Penal Code for Muslim Worship limit the practice of religions and restrict public assembly for the purpose of worship. It reported that the law requires organised religious groups to register with the Government and increases punishments for individuals who proselytize Muslims. It stated that: 'Credible reporting indicates that the Government has used the Penal Code to restrict Shi’a worship'.

The US State Department reported that amendments to the Penal Code in 2001 established harsh punishments for any person, who acts "against the noble nature of the mosque" or acts in a manner "likely to offend public cohesion" but that the amendments do not specify what actions would constitute such acts.

Radio France Internacionale reported in September 2008 that the Algerian Minister of the Interior wants to reinforce government control over the mosques to respond to the proliferation of new rites adopted from abroad. Radio France Internacionale also stated that in addition to closing sites of non-authorised muslim sects, the Algerian government has decided to undertake a more extensive training of imams. The Minister intends to give an accelerated and obligatory training to imams in order to favour a strict application of the malekite rite [Sunni practice] and intends to reduce the influence of practices from outside the country.

Sources consulted (including internet sites)

Africa Confidential
Al Ahram Weekly
Al Arabiye
Algeria-events.com
Algerian Embassy in Republic of Korea
Aljazeera.net
AllAfrica.com
Amnesty International

---
