Kenya

In 2009, the Government launched an ILO-IPEC project to establish models for child labor free areas in Kenya and continued to expand its cash transfer program for orphans and vulnerable children. Despite these efforts, Kenya has failed to commit sufficient resources to effectively enforce child labor laws. As a result, children continue to be involved in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in agriculture.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children are exploited in the worst forms of child labor in Kenya, many of them in agriculture and fishing. Roughly 79 percent of all working children are engaged in agriculture, working on tea and sugar plantations, ranches, and in the production of coffee, miraa (a stimulant plant), rice, sisal, and tobacco. Although evidence is limited, there is also reason to believe that the worst forms of child labor are used in the production of flowers. Children involved in agriculture often work long hours, use dangerous tools and farm machinery, and are exposed to toxic substances and harmful pests. Children also engage in fishing, including for tilapia and sardines, for which they use knives and hooks and dive under water to chase fish into nets.

Outside the agriculture sector, children are employed in charcoal burning, logging, and mining. There is limited evidence that children mine in abandoned gold mines, where they may be exposed to toxic materials, increasing their chances of developing respiratory diseases. Limited evidence suggests that children work in small quarries by breaking rocks into gravel without protective gear. There is also reason to believe that the worst forms of child labor are used in the production of alcohol, furniture, and textiles. Children also work in construction and domestic service. Child domestics are vulnerable to sexual harassment by their employers and work long hours. Children are also involved in the transportation industry and carry heavy hand luggage. In dumpsites, children collect and sell scrap materials such as metal and paper, often exposing themselves to tetanus and other infectious diseases by sorting through waste with their bare hands.

Although not available for analysis in this report, in June 2008 the Government released a report analyzing the child labor situation in the country based on more recent data from the 2005 Integrated Household Budget Survey Labor Module. In general, the report indicates a reduction in the number of working children in harmful conditions. However, the survey omits the estimated 700,000 children living and working on the streets due to household-level surveying constraints.

Children in Kenya are also found in other activities constituting the worst forms of child labor, such as participation in armed militias, debt bondage, and prostitution. Child prostitution is prevalent in Nairobi, Kisumu, Eldoret, Nyeri, and the coastal areas. In 2006, UNICEF estimated that up to 30 percent of girls between ages 12 and 18 living in the coastal areas of Malindi, Mombasa, Kalifi, and Diani—or between 10,000 and 15,000 girls—were engaged in prostitution.\textsuperscript{2663} Sex tourism is also prevalent in these coastal areas.\textsuperscript{2664}

Children are also trafficked for forced labor in street vending, domestic service, agricultural labor, herding, sex tourism, and prostitution.\textsuperscript{2665} Poverty and the death of one or both parents may contribute to a family’s decision to place a child with better-off relatives, friends, or acquaintances that may end up trafficking the child.\textsuperscript{2666}

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment Act of 2007 prohibits the employment of children in the worst forms of child labor. According to the Employment Act, the minimum age for employment is 16 years and the minimum age for hazardous work is 18 years.\textsuperscript{2667}

Under the Kenyan Constitution adopted in August 2010, forced labor, slavery, and servitude are prohibited.\textsuperscript{2668} The Children’s Act of 2001 prohibits all forms of hazardous child labor, child trafficking, and children from being recruited into the military.\textsuperscript{2669} The Sexual Offences Act of 2006 prohibits child trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation, promoting child sex tourism, child prostitution, and child pornography.\textsuperscript{2670} In 2008, the Government completed its list of hazardous occupations for children, appropriately including all major sectors where children work, such as agriculture, domestic service, transport, mining and stone crushing, herding of animals, deep lake or sea fishing, and work in the urban informal sector.\textsuperscript{2671}

While these laws and regulations provide a strong legal framework against the worst forms of child labor, two significant gaps remain. First, the Children’s Act does not prohibit domestic and international trafficking, or the recruitment, harboring, transportation, transfer, and receipt of children for the purposes of forced labor.\textsuperscript{2672} To fill this gap, the Government developed the Counter Trafficking in Persons Bill (2009), which is currently under deliberation in Parliament.\textsuperscript{2673} Children are required to attend school until age 13. This standard makes children ages 13 to 16 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as they are not required to be in school and are below the minimum age for work.\textsuperscript{2674}

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Inter-Ministerial Coordination Committee is the primary child labor policy making mechanism and manages the implementation of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor in Kenya. Chaired by the Vice President, this committee is intended to meet no less than four times a year. The National Steering Committee on Child Labor is chaired by the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Labor and is charged with developing a child labor monitoring and evaluation system as well as disseminating information on the worst forms of child labor.\textsuperscript{2675} However, the Inter-Ministerial Coordinating Committee has never met and the National Steering Committee on Child Labor met only twice in four years. The Ministry of Labor could not offer customary compensation to committee participants and did not have adequate staff to develop an agenda or organize meetings.\textsuperscript{2676} The Ministry of Agriculture has not been charged with a role in efforts to combat hazardous child labor, although the majority of working children are engaged in agriculture.\textsuperscript{2677}
Within the Ministry of Labor, the Child Labor Division was designated to be the Secretariat for both the Inter-Ministerial Coordination Committee and National Steering Committee on Child Labor. The Child Labor Division leads efforts to monitor action programs for the elimination of child labor at the district and community level. It also manages an information resource center to improve the collection and dissemination of data on child labor throughout the country. Reports indicate the Child Labor Division lacks ministerial support and does not have adequate staff, with only one employee on full time assignment. The National Council for Children’s Services, Area Advisory Committees, District Child Labor Committees, and Local Child Labor Committees also coordinate efforts to combat child labor. While detailed information is not available on all these bodies, available evidence suggests that since many District Child Labor Committees rely on volunteers, their success depends on whether they can obtain funding and whether members regularly participate.

The National Steering Committee on Anti-Trafficking in Persons coordinates efforts to combat child trafficking. The Steering Committee’s ability to carry out its mandate and share information is unknown, as during the reporting period it met infrequently.

The Government of Kenya has also designated institutions for enforcement of child labor laws. The Ministry of Labor (MOL) is responsible for investigating labor infractions and pursuing child labor complaints with its 96 inspectors. Labor inspectors may terminate an employment agreement between a child and employer in any labor situation. Once an incident of child labor is found, the MOL refers cases to the Ministry of Gender and Child Affairs for further investigation and possible prosecution. Significant criminal violations are referred to the Kenyan police, who participate in District Child Labor Committees. The police and labor inspectors have seven days to investigate a worst form of child labor complaint and provide any findings to the person who submitted the complaint and the Minister of Labor. Reportedly, the MOL has difficulty enforcing the law due to inadequate funding, and even lacks basic office supplies. There appears to be inconsistent awareness and little training on child labor issues for labor inspectors.

The Ministry of Gender and Child Affairs is responsible for enforcing laws relating to hazardous and forced child labor and is the lead agency on anti-trafficking issues. This Ministry employed 400 child protection officers in 2009, up from 310 in 2008. Protection officers cannot arrest offenders or prosecute crimes against children; instead they have access to prosecutors from the Attorney General’s office for these purposes. In collaboration with a local NGO, the Ministry of Gender and Child Affairs operates Childline Kenya, a toll-free, nationwide hotline to provide counseling and referrals to callers who need assistance with child labor and child prostitution situations. In 2010, the Kenyan Government created a National Steering Committee for the Childline, chaired by the Ministry of Gender Permanent Secretary, to advance the investigation of cases initiated by calls to the hotline. Childline received 30,000 calls for help and support in the last year, of which over 350 calls were related to child labor. Investigations were launched for the child labor calls, although most cases were not prosecuted.

In 2009, the Government charged 119 parents and guardians of 209 children with abusing their children by removing them from school and forcing them to work as domestic servants. It is unclear which enforcement body initiated the cases and whether they were enforced as a result of a labor investigation. Information is not available on how many child labor investigations were opened, how many citations issued, and whether child labor cases were managed effectively and appropriate penalties applied.

The police’s anti-trafficking unit and the Criminal Investigation Department are responsible for enforcing laws related to trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in illicit activities. During the reporting period, the police opened 25 child trafficking cases resulting in 267 children being rescued, of which three violators of the law were convicted. However reports indicate the number of police officers is inadequate given the extent of trafficking crimes. Reports also indicate this unit lacks sufficient resources to carry out investigations and provide services to victims. In addition, due to a lack of training, the police’s anti-trafficking unit and the Criminal Investigation Department’s effectiveness have been called into question.
Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor in Kenya (2004-2015, revised 2008) serves as the primary government instrument to prevent and eliminate child labor in Kenya. This plan aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015 by targeting vulnerable populations, including orphans and vulnerable children and HIV/AIDS affected children, and addressing the root causes of child labor in Kenya such as poverty, the lack of access to education, and weak government institutions. This plan is implemented through the ILO-IPEC Timebound Program (TBP) and prioritizes law enforcement, awareness raising, and universal basic education. However, the Child Labor Division was not provided with a budget to implement its many roles and responsibilities under this plan.

Child labor concerns are mainstreamed into Kenyan development agendas and key policy documents including the Vision 2030, UNDAF (2009-2013), ILO Country Program for the Republic of Kenya (2007-2011), Kenya Education Sector Support Program (2005-2010), and the Policy for Alternative Provision of Basic Education and Training (2009). Other policy initiatives exist that do not explicitly consider child labor issues, such as the Orphans and Vulnerable Children (OVC) Policy and National Action Plan (2003). The question of whether these policies have an impact on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

In addition, other policy initiatives aimed at sustainably reducing child labor have not been formally adopted by the Government. One policy still in draft form is the National Child Labor Policy, which aims to prevent harmful child labor practices, especially the worst forms of child labor, by increasing human capital. It addresses the factors causing children to enter the labor market, such as poverty, internal conflict, a weak education system, lack of social security and employment opportunities, and HIV/AIDS.

The establishment of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor in Kenya and the inclusion of child labor as a priority in numerous development goals are important accomplishments; however, the National Child Labor Policy remains in draft form.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent Child Labor

In 2005, the Government of Kenya launched its TBP targeting children engaged in the worst forms of child labor. To date, the TBP is the primary instrument to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The first phase of the TBP included a 4-year project funded by USDOL at $5 million, which ended in April 2009. This project withdrew or prevented 25,852 children from exploitive labor in domestic service, commercial sexual exploitation, commercial and subsistence agriculture, fishing, herding, and informal-sector street work.

In support of the TBP, the Government also took part in the 4-year Kenya, Uganda, Rwanda, and Ethiopia Together (KURET) project, funded by USDOL at $14.5 million and World Vision at $5.9 million through March 2009. KURET withdrew or prevented a total of 32,823 children from exploitive labor in HIV/AIDS-affected areas of these four countries through the provision of educational services.

In 2009, the Government launched the second phase of the TBP, which included another 4-year project funded by USDOL at $4.6 million. This project aims to withdraw and prevent a total of 8,155 children from exploitive labor through the provision of direct educational services and will provide 1,000 families with access to micro-credit, socio-economic programs, employment creation schemes, and skills development education.

The Government also participates in a 4-year $18.9 million project funded by the European Commission to combat child labor through education in 11 countries. In addition, the Government of Kenya participated in two other projects through December 2009 that promoted national coordination in combating child labor. These programs were funded by the Government of Germany at $447,410 and $538,731, respectively.

In support of efforts to reduce the high incidence of child prostitution in the coastal regions, the Ministry of Tourism and Wildlife, UNICEF, and the World Tourism Organization worked to raise awareness of child prostitution and child sex tourism among hotels and tour operators and lobbied companies in the hospitality industry to adopt and implement the ECPAT Code of Conduct. During the reporting period an additional 66 hotels signed the Code of Conduct.\textsuperscript{2720} Despite these pledges, more effort is needed to withdraw and prevent children from prostitution and sex tourism and to raise awareness among the tourist population on the penalties for these crimes.\textsuperscript{2721}

To address the trafficking of children in Kenya’s agriculture sector, the Government in partnership with the International Solidarity Center, the Kenya Plantation and Agricultural Workers Union, and the Kenya Sugar Plantation Workers Union, undertook a 1-year program funded by the US Department of State at $301,150.\textsuperscript{2722} This project aims to generate incentives for parents to keep children in school, train shop stewards as monitors and peer educators, and raise awareness about child trafficking to encourage workplace policies that do not facilitate or condone child trafficking.\textsuperscript{2723}

The Government also implemented its own social protection programs. For example, in 2009 the Government, with World Bank assistance, scaled up its cash transfer program for OVCs to cover 90,000 households in 47 districts.\textsuperscript{2724} The program provides monthly cash transfers to families of working children to help meet basic needs, including school costs, to prevent children from having to work.\textsuperscript{2725} To receive benefits from the program, caregivers of OVCs must attend training classes on nutrition and reproductive health and ensure that children under their care receive birth certificates, immunizations, and attend basic education. Every year since 2005, the Government has increased its funding to this program, providing $10.6 million in 2009-2010.\textsuperscript{2726} During the reporting period, the Government also launched a national census to allow for further collection of child labor data.\textsuperscript{2727} It is unclear whether this census will also collect data on the trafficking of children, an area where information is currently limited.\textsuperscript{2728}

In collaboration with 11 other African countries, Kenya strengthened its ability to combat the trafficking of children by participating in the East African Police Chiefs Cooperation Organization (EAPCCO) to strengthen regional cooperation and capacities among East African law enforcement authorities.\textsuperscript{2729} The Government also participates in the Regional Program for Eastern Africa (2009-2012), which includes activities that support the ratification and implementation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its Protocols and the development of border control systems.\textsuperscript{2730} During the reporting period, the MOL, in collaboration with the IOM, implemented a trafficking awareness and inspection program for the country’s 35 foreign employment agencies. As part of this program, members of the Kenya Association of Private Employment Agencies received training on measures to prevent labor trafficking.\textsuperscript{2731}

While the Government participates in numerous initiatives and implements its own programs, it has not committed adequate resources to sustain many of these internationally sponsored activities nor linked projects to existing social protection programs. In general, such programs are under-funded, limiting the Government’s ability to provide assistance to victims.\textsuperscript{2732}
Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the reduction of the worst forms of child labor in Kenya:

IN THE AREA OF LAW AND REGULATIONS:
- Seek swift passage of the Counter Trafficking in Persons Bill to prohibit domestic and international trafficking and the recruitment, harboring, transportation, transfer, and receipt of children for the purposes of forced labor.
- Raise the compulsory education age to 16.

IN THE AREA OF COORDINATION AND ENFORCEMENT:
- Ensure the Inter-Ministerial Coordinating Committee, National Steering Committee on Child Labor, and National Steering Committee on Anti-Trafficking have the resources and staff to carry out their responsibilities.
- Designate a role for the Ministry of Agriculture in the effort to combat the worst forms of child labor.
- Hire staff for the District Child Labor Committees to raise funds and manage volunteers.
- Strengthen the capacity of the Ministry of Labor, Kenyan police, the police’s anti-trafficking unit, and the Criminal Investigation Department to carry out their mandate:
  - Allocating resources to carry out investigations and provide services to victims.
  - Providing regular training on the worst forms of child labor.
- Make publicly available information about how many child labor investigations are opened, how many citations and criminal prosecutions initiated and issued, and what penalties are applied.

IN THE AREA OF GOVERNMENT POLICY ON CHILD LABOR:
- Strengthen national policies against the worst forms of child labor:
  - Amend the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor to provide the Child Labor Division with the necessary resources, such as additional personnel and ministerial support, to carry out its mandate;
  - Assess the impact the Orphans and Vulnerable Children (OVC) Policy and National Action Plan (2003) may have on addressing the worst forms of child labor;
  - Enact and implement the National Child Labor Policy.

IN THE AREA OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO COMBAT CHILD LABOR:
- Expand and improve programs to prevent children’s involvement in the worst forms of child labor:
  - Expand government resources that support child labor elimination projects;
  - Link projects with existing social protection programs to ensure the long-term sustainability of project initiatives;
  - Expand efforts to withdraw and prevent children from prostitution and sex tourism and deepen awareness raising efforts among the tourist population.
Data provided in the chart at the beginning of this country report are based on UCW analysis of ILO SIMPOC, UNICEF MICS, and World Bank surveys, Child Economic Activity, School Attendance, and Combined Working and Studying Rates, 2005-2010. Data are from 2000. Reliable data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics and information on children’s work in general are reported in this section, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For more information on sources used, the definition of working children, and other indicators used in this report, please see the “Children’s Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions” section of this report.
