1. Please provide information on the current extent of Serbian Radical Party (SRS) or other extremist presence and impact in Zabalj. Please also include evidence of current elected representatives and to which party they belong.

Reports of violent attacks, property damage or intimidation did not list the political affiliation (if any) of the perpetrators; and in many cases, the perpetrators were never found. Country Advice 37720 discusses the treatment of Serbians opposed to the Serbian Radical Party in the Autonomous Province of Vojvodina, or the municipality of Zabalj. No further information on the presence of extremist nationalists in addition to that provided in Country Advice 37720 was located.

After the fall of Milosevic in 2000, the Serbian Radical Party (SRS or the Radical Party) briefly disappeared from the political landscape, only to reappear at the 2003 Parliamentary elections.¹ The three most recent national polls were: 2004 Presidential; 2007 Parliamentary; and 2008 Presidential. The ruling coalition government is comprised of the so-called ‘democratic block’ which includes the Democratic Party (DS); G17 Plus (G17+); the League of Vojvodina Social Democrats (LSV); the Social Democratic Party of Serbia (SDP); and the Serbian Renewal Movement (SPO).²

The most recent national elections held in Serbia were the Parliamentary elections in May 2008, and the Presidential elections in January (first round) and February (second round) 2008.³

The municipality of Zabalj is located in the district of South Bačka in the northern Autonomous Province of Vojvodina.⁴ The Province has been the site of significant post conflict migration of Serbs from Kosovo.\(^5\) A result of this influx of displaced Serbs has been an increase in ethnic tension in the province, which climaxed in 2004 after a series of attacks on ethnic minorities by Vojvodina Serbs in response to an Albanian riot in Kosovo which injured Kosovar-Serbs\(^6\) and continued into 2005\(^7\). In a result which reflected the changing demographic of Vojvodina, in the 2004 municipal elections, the only major city to be won by the SRS was the capital of Vojvodina, Novi Sad.\(^8\) In recent years, racially motivated incidents in Vojvodina have experienced a decline, although attacks continue to be reported sporadically.\(^9\)

2. Please provide any information about current police protection from criminal / extremist violence in Zabalj.

Serbian criminal law does not explicitly proscribe racially motivated attacks, which makes it very difficult for Serbian authorities and outside observers to ascertain the true extent of the problem.\(^10\) No information was located which dealt specifically with Zabalj.

Some general information was located which suggested that, where victims reported incidents to the police in Vojvodina, the police occasionally respond with investigations, and occasionally arrests; however, the conversion of arrests to convictions was not able to be located.

Reports by Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International in 2006 and 2007 refer to attacks against Hungarians. They also note an increase in other parts of Serbia of anti-Semitic and anti-Muslim graffiti, as well as continued physical assaults and discrimination against Roma.\(^11\) Similarly, the United State Department reports on human rights practices in Serbia in 2005 and 2006 stated that there continued to be incidents of vandalism and some physical attacks against minorities, “mainly Hungarians in Vojvodina”, but noted that the number of incidents had decreased compared with 2004.

The underrepresentation of ethnic minorities within the Serbian police force and the recent history of the Serbian police as enforcer for an ultra-nationalist state are also contributing factors. As Human Rights Watch noted in 2004, Hungarians made up only 1.3 percent of police employees in Vojvodina. In its 2005 report, Human Rights Watch provided the following explanation:

The police force was a key institution in the ultra nationalistic government of the former Serbian president Slobodan Milosevic during 1990s. Non-Serbs were virtually excluded from its ranks. Nearly five years after the removal of Milosevic from power in October 2000, Serbia still has a long way to go before ultra-nationalism is eradicated from police service and from the Serbian society as a whole.

The European Commission against Racism and Intolerance similarly stated that a “degree of nationalism and a lack of sensitivity to incidents of this kind have been observed within the police”.

3. Please find out whether there is a group in Zabalj called the League of Social Democrats in Vojvodina, and if it or the Democratic Party have a large presence there, and who the leader is.

The League of Vojvodina Social Democrats (Serbian: Лига социјалдемократа Војводине, Liga socijaldemokrata Vojvodine) (LSV) is a regionalist social democratic political party in Serbia established in 1990. The leader of the party is Nenad Čanak.

At the national level, the LSV is currently a minor member of the ruling democratic coalition which formed government after the 2008 Presidential elections.\textsuperscript{19} As mentioned in Question 1, the so-called ‘democratic block’ includes the Democratic Party (DS); G17 Plus (G17+); the League of Vojvodina Social Democrats (LSV); the Social Democratic Party of Serbia (SDP); and the Serbian Renewal Movement (SPO).\textsuperscript{20}

In the most recent 2008 Legislative Assembly elections in the Autonomous Province of Vojvodina, the Democratic Party formed government with the pro-EU, pro-government reform party G17Plus (G17+) (with a cumulative total of 34.9 per cent of the vote, and 64 seats). The Serbian Radical Party won just over 30 per cent of the vote, and 25 seats, and the League of Vojvodina Social Democrats won 8.5 per cent of the vote (6 seats).\textsuperscript{21}

The Assembly of the Autonomous Province of Vojvodina has five Vice Presidents; currently, one of these Vice Presidents, Maja Sedlarevic, is a member the LSV.\textsuperscript{22}
